Wind patterns in International Education

John van der Zwann, John Gill, Yinka Mosis, Alys Freeman

The latest enrolment and immigration data show that most education sectors are on track to meet short- to medium-term growth targets. In addition, the Government's Going for Growth plan identifies the school sector as a priority for accelerated growth, reflecting its high quality, low risk profile, and capacity to expand.

This session explores the financial implications of enrolling international students to support sustainable growth in schools. It will cover practical and compliance-critical topics including international student price-setting, scholarships and other incentives, legislative requirements, cost management, measuring financial success, and effective reporting.

Participants will leave with practical insights, tools, and approaches that can be applied immediately on returning to their schools.
